

MY PROFILE

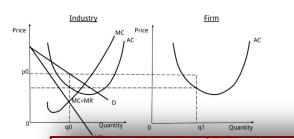

NETWORK ▼

ESSAY DATABASE

RESUME DATABASE

monopolistic i yoghurt indust drive up yogh maximizing mo allocatively ine MR. However, goods. Theref individual firm Consu expensive price cartel, the oppo new sense of independence.

Writing Resumes: A Guide for Undergrads

A resume is a snapshot of the education, experience, and skills you have that are valuable to an employer. Its main purpose is to convince a potential employer to invite you for an interview - to make them want to learn more about you. Resumes are used to screen applicants and determine which candidates have the background most closely matching the employers' needs. It answers the questions: "have you", "can you", and "will you do the job". Before writing a resume, you should...

- Research the industry and the job so you fully understand what the employer is seeking Learn to speak their language. Pay attention to vocabulary that is particular to the industry
- Learn about the trends developing in the industry

red 20 math tutoring complishments. Choose list of everything you've d the planning of a 4-day d spacing.

ge, or citizenship details

ly spend 30

ational, etc.

I stepped off the bus, narrowly dodging a speeding biker. A crowd of people flowed around me, as the honks of vehicles and incomprehensible conversations filled the air. I glanced at the hand-drawn map my homestay father had given me. His directions were scribbled, but I could decipher that I was nowhere near my final destination. Instead, I was in an unknown neighborhood, in a city completely foreign to me. I looked at the street signs around me, as my heart started pounding. "人民西." "近华浦." I looked back at my homestay father's map, frantically scanning it for any clues to my location. But none appeared. I was now isolated, hundreds of miles away from all that I knew.

Before this summer, I had never been away from my family and friends. But in the bustling city of Kunming, the heart of Southern China, I was alone. Initially grouped with fourteen other American students, we were sent to live with homestay families around the city. Our phones were confiscated to force us to interact with our environment. We had to find our way around the city, including traveling to and from our Chinese language classes. I was sent to the outskirts of Kunming, where my family had no knowledge of English. When I left for class on my first day, all they could impart to me was a bus pass and a note purporting to guide me through the confusing city. Previously, in the company of my fellow students, I had learned to navigate the nearby village of Lashihai. I was confident that Kunming would be as easy to navigate. But as I would soon learn, surviving the city on my own would require me to develop a

IB/AP NOT

